

Like Little Italy in the '50s, abuzz with families and sounds and smells, Buca di Beppo honors the soul of Italian cooking, re-rooted and flourishing in America.

Translated from Italian, Buca di Beppo means, "Joe's basement." It's a neighborhood restaurant where meats and pastas overflow from family platters right onto the table, wine flows from the jug, and laughter often drowns out the music. It's southern Italy's "la cucina povera" ("the kitchen of the poor") clear of starvation's shadow. Where antipasti and insalata precede southern Italian standards like chicken cacciatore, linguini with clam sauce, and Neapolitan pizzas as grand as our ovens can accommodate. Where our signature spaghetti and meatballs is itself a feast, boasting three half-pound meatballs anchoring two pounds of pasta, ladled with marinara sauce, sprinkled with imported pecorino Romano cheese.

Like all of our sauces, we make the marinara daily from scratch. Italian immigrants insisted on meticulous preparation to assure quality and guarantee the purest flavors. That's why we spend all day cooking the way our grandmothers did, why we serve imported semolina pasta. And why we simmer our meatballs in tomato sauce when other restaurants throw them under a broiler.

This is real immigrant southern Italian food, not some canned or corporate bastardization. Smell it, taste it, visit the kitchen and watch us prepare it. Each dish — each ingredient — has earned its place on our menu. Representing culinary traditions dating back over two millennia, pizzas and pastas nourished the Italians during periods of near-starvation. Our meats pay tribute to the immigrants' hardscrabble lives and their steady climb out of poverty. And our desserts reflect their love of celebration even in the face of extreme hardship.

While all of our cooking reflects the southern Italian roots of Buca di Beppo, the flavors also testify to the immigrants' resourcefulness and ingenuity in working with the ingredients readily available in the new land. Specials like Salmon Siracusa, pork chops Limoncello, and the Sicilian Calzone embody a cuisine both rooted in tradition and alive with innovation.

The San Jose Mercury News called Buca di Beppo, "Vital, vibrant, and powerfully flavored." You'll be too busy eating to do anything but snack your lips in agreement.

Meant to be shared, Buca di Beppo antipasti ($5.95 - $13.95) arrive in family-style portions ("That's Italian family, not nuclear family" waxes the Seattle Post-Intelligencer). From our signature garlic bread to mussels marinara, each boasts the powerful flavors of our immigrant southern Italian roots.

One of our most perceptive and witty political pundits is Wendell Trogdon, author of the Indianapolis News' daily Quips column. Here's a sampling:

Indiana legislators now get $11,600 a year... which isn't nearly as much as most other comedians make.

Indianapolis doesn't need a new zoo. It has the General Assembly.

Most problems don't exist until a government agency is created to solve them.

Indiana had a headstart on Prohibition. Partly through the leadership of teetotaler Republican Governor J. Frank Hanly, by 1910 70 of our 92 counties were "dry." Statewide prohibition followed in 1917, and Indiana was feeling parched indeed by the time national Prohibition was repealed in 1933.

The closest, probably crookedest Indiana election was that of 1888. The Democratic Indianapolis Sentinel printed a letter from the GOP national treasurer outlining ways to buy votes. Indiana's Benjamin Harrison, Republican candidate for President, won handily nationally but squeaked out a Hoosier plurality of 2,300 votes.

Mug-wump: n. 1. A political independent. 2. A Republican who could not or would not support the party candidate, James G. Blaine, for President in 1884. 3. An Indianapolis urbanite who desires an array of libational and culinary choices, but who cannot always make up his mind; often accused of sitting on the fence with his mug on one side and his wump on the other.

ABOUT THE PALOMINO DESIGN...

Palomino opened in Indianapolis on April 16, 1996 that provided exciting surroundings and an unparalleled Mediterranean/Northwest menu.

Exacting care and remarkable effort went into the design of Palomino. Some of the features are:

Wall Art
